To Whom It May Concern,

I saw the play Lucasville: The Untold Story of a Prison Rebellion by Gary Anderson at Shasta College in Redding, CA. This play is based upon events from a prison take-over by inmates at the maximum security Southern Ohio Correctional Facility in Lucasville in 1993. It was the longest prison siege in U.S. history.

The play is extremely engaging. I sat riveted on the edge of my seat throughout the presentation. Lucasville is a fascinating and powerful exposé of the United States' penal system's failure to provide equal application of the law. The lack of equal justice for racial minorities and the poor is vividly emphasized in the play.

The American Civil Liberties Union has long been aware of U. S. penal inequities, and welcomes efforts such as Gary Anderson's fine play that make the public aware of the necessity for immediate and fundamental systemic reform.

I recommend this play without reservation. It would be an exceptional tool to raise public consciousness, especially in areas of the United States where the fairness of capital punishment is being considered.

Sincerely,

Donald Yost,
